More About the Summit

At #BBSJ15, current and former FCC officials, Members of Congress, nonprofit and industry leaders will address how to improve diversity in the ownership of media and telecom assets in Silicon Valley and beyond, remove education and health disparities through technology, preserve an open Internet, close the digital divide, and improve the images of people of color in all media. In particular, experts will discuss how the process of achieving multicultural digital equality can stimulate economic opportunity, create jobs, generate wealth, and prime the pipeline for careers in science, technology, engineering, and mathematics (STEM).

As MMTC celebrates its 28th year, this year's conference will also highlight MMTC's new leadership, future plans to improve digital equity and ownership, and announce plans to deepen MMTC's commitment to training and mentoring next-generation leaders, lawyers, advocates, and entrepreneurs.
